INVITED

The Good News is that we have all been invited—invited to the Kingdom, invited to be disciples. It's a life-changing invitation, and like so many other such invitations, it requires a great deal of deliberation and discernment. Whether we choose marriage, ordination, single life, or community life, we know the serious planning and consideration that accompany these profound decisions. Like the tower-builder in the Gospel, we have weighed both the monetary and emotional cost. We have pondered and planned our lives in the direction to which we believe God has called us. And while we pray for guidance and acceptance of God's will, we often fail to understand so much. Like Solomon, we turn to God for wisdom and counsel in our life-changing decisions.

Ask Fr. George...

Ad Orientem vs Versum Populum ?

Toward the East or Facing the People? If you are not yet familiar with this debate, you will likely soon be hearing more about it. Actually, it is not really a debate, it is a liturgical option that most people, even some priests, are not aware of. For most of the history of the Church, Liturgical celebrations always had the priest 'facing the East' because from the earliest traditions, the Savior would come from the East: just as the sun rises in the East, so too will the Son come from the East. "From the rising of the sun to its setting, may the name of the Lord be praised" Psm 113.

So, for many years our Catholic churches were built in an East/West orientation, with the altar at the East end. The priest and the people all faced the same direction towards where the Savior would emerge. The Second Vatican Council called for the main altars to be free standing so the priest could walk around it, as when incensing the altar at a High Mass. However the speculation is that one thing lead to another, and with the absence of training for the New Order of the Mass, (Novus Ordo), many priests thought they were intended to stand behind the altar and an "Ad Populum" gave permission for the Canon of the Mass (Eucharistic Prayer), to be said facing the people. Thus the common practice became the norm although that was apparently never the intention. The Roman Missal, which guides the actions of the Liturgy, still gives such instructions as, "while the Priest, facing the people, says...." and "standing at the middle of the altar, facing the people...says..," and "The Priest, turned towards the people...adds...," and "the priest genuflects, takes the host....while facing the people, says aloud..." all imply that he was not facing them in the previous liturgical action.

So, it appears to many, that celebrating Mass 'Ad Orientem' is not a change as much as it is a restoration. There are many good reasons why the Mass was, and may still be, celebrated with the priest facing the same direction as the people (I personally think it is wrong to say the priest has his back to the people because it leaves a suggestion of rudeness. If that were the case then everyone in front of you also has their back to you!?). Perhaps the most important reason is that the Mass is really about God and not us, the people. The prayers offered at Mass are all directed towards God and not to the people. Therefore, the priest, who says the prayers for himself and the people, ought to be facing towards God - the East (either the actual or the Liturgical East, that is, the crucifix and tabernacle). Imagine someone talking to you but looking directly at someone else. It is also important to remember that the priest is, himself, part of the people of God who needs redemption. The priest doesn't stand alone as some kind of, "better than others", so he stands as one with the people of God, on the same side of the altar, facing towards God with the people of God. Someone recently told me that the priest is like a general in front of his army, and leading them into battle, charging in the same direction, not the opposite!

All this is NOT to say that Mass facing the people is wrong, by any means, it does say that there are legitimate alternative forms of the one, same, Sacrifice whether it be said in English or Spanish, in Greek or Latin, facing the people or in the same direction. The Mass is the Sacrifice of Christ, it is about offering praise and worship to Him and not to self. Ad Orientem is an option each priest has to help lead the people of God into the Kingdom of God.

We celebrate some of our weekday Masses "Ad Orientem" and many have found that form to be very easy to adapt to since it requires no change of action by the people, no change of wording or language, and at the same time, a spiritually uplifting Celebration.
